About the workshop

Leadership and management skills are essential for all organisations providing services for the public and for building the human capital to deliver efficient and effective public sector organisations fit for the future – and the constitutional principle of judicial independence does not exempt rule of law institutions from requiring such skills from those who work in and with them. Judicial and administrative institutions such as courts, tribunals, Ministries of Justice and related agencies, require leadership and management skills, albeit within the context of judicial independence. This is increasingly the case as external circumstances drive governments and the judiciary to consider reform and change. This workshop will look at leadership and management skills with a sector-specific focus on rule of law institutions and judicial leadership, and how these skills can help you facilitate and deliver change.

The workshop will enable you to consider the relationship between judicial independence and judicial leadership and to consider a range of possible leadership models that are relevant to rule of law institutions. It will also enable you to consider how performance and quality management can play a role in such institutions while retaining judicial independence. We will also look at change management in a legal/judicial context, at training skills for legal trainers and at administrative management roles within rule of law institutions in order to equip you with a suite of skills to help you manage day-to-day organisational stressors, develop staff engagement and motivation, and build resilience. During the week, you will undertake a Myers Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI) psychometric assessment, which will provide you with feedback on how you interact with others, allowing you to improve your interpersonal skills in people management, along with an Emotional Intelligence Profile which will enable you to better understand how you manage yourself to be personally and interpersonally effective.

Who is the workshop for?

The workshop is designed to improve the leadership and management skills, knowledge and confidence of judges, senior judicial and court administration leaders and managers, as well as others working in or with rule of law institutions and the judicial system such as Ministries of Justice and related agencies with a view to improving overall efficiency, productivity and professionalism in this unique sector.

How participants will benefit

The workshop will enable you to:

- Develop personal leadership and management capabilities to make an impact and contribute to the future of your organisation
- Tackle existing and future people management and performance issues and understand the ways good management can enhance positive outcomes and increase productivity while respecting judicial independence
- Develop emotional intelligence and increase your personal impact, drawing on both a comprehensive, individual Myers Briggs Type Indicator Report and a tailored Emotional Intelligence Profile
- Review and implement plans to increase leadership and management performance, motivation, capability and productivity in your organisation
- Recognise the approaches you can use and changes you can implement to enhance service delivery through effective use of resources and through change management
- Review your institution's training approach within the context of judicial independence
- Grow and develop your international network and share good practice.

What the workshop will cover

The workshop will focus on leadership and management roles and skills within rule of law institutions, and how these can be used effectively within the context of judicial independence. There will be briefings, practical work and feedback. This participative programme will have discussions on: judicial independence, judicial leadership, the role of the manager; the qualities and capabilities of effective managers and leaders; change management, personal effectiveness and legal and judicial training approaches.

The overall objectives for the workshop are to:

- Enhance your understanding of leadership and management roles in rule of law institutions and their interrelationship with judicial independence
- Identify and explore leadership and management skills with specific reference to rule of law institutions (including people management, performance and quality management, engagement and resilience; building relationships; decision making, influencing and coaching skills; teamwork and change management)
- Give an insight into training for trainers in the legal and judicial setting
